MIDDLESEX LEAD BRITISH BRIGADE IN NEW NAKTONG DRIVE

(FROM FRANK OWEN)

Korea, Sept. 21.

British troops today crossed the Nakdong River in force joining in the general offensive all along the southern front. Their passage was not contested as the main body marched over a bridge smashed by the enemy in his withdrawal and rebuilt by American sappers last night under fire.

The Middlesex Regiment were the first across the river which has so far been their front. The Argylls followed and despite some belated mortar shelling, by nightfall all were safely on the far bank without a single casualty.

American troops beyond them were all packed up and also on their right flank made further advances up to five miles north of Waegwan, key front line to the city strongly held by the enemy.

As the Allied breakthrough through Waegwan had developed to the northeast, the British brigade moved off holding positions along the Nakdong River below Taegu and marched toward the south of the city.

Dusk had fallen last night when Lieutenant Colonel George Nielson of the Argylls returned to his tent after a long day in the field. He said "Not a damn thing is going to keep me up tonight." An hour later he received an order to move his troops at dawn.

The Big Three Guarantee

Frankfurt, Sept. 21.

The United States High Commissioner in Germany, Mr. John J. McCloy, said today that the main object of the Foreign Minister's talks in New York had been to find "a means of preventing war and a formula for peace."

At a press conference a few hours after his return from the talks, he said that the object also was to create a "clarity and strength of position" to ensure peace.

Mr. McCloy said that the Western Powers' guarantee to West Germany and West Berlin applied to a "firm and lasting peace." He said the number of American reinforcements promised were secret but "substantial."—Reuter.

LONDON ELOQUENCE

Wheel to wheel the drivers drove exchanging frank criticism of each other's driving ability and probable family history with the eloquence of London bus drivers.

To judge by the ditched tanks and overturned trucks on either bank, however, were evenly divided between the two streams of traffic.

In the midst of this inferno of dust and mud, odd civilian touches of normal life were added as a tank engine came tearing out of the town all its bells clanging and sirens screaming to put out a fire in a house blazing nicely late last night.

A demonstration of new anti-tank weapons was carried out at Westminster recently before the Defence Ministers of several countries and experts. This picture shows a French anti-tank weapon being fired from the standing position. (Central Press.)

Armed Troops Patrol British Sector Border In Berlin

Berlin, Sept. 21.

Berlin's border raids between rival East and West sector police seemed headed for a stalemate tonight as both sides reported "all quiet" in their respective territories.

On numbers victory so far has gone to the West sector police, who claim 47 Soviet sector police behind bars. Four women "People's" police of the original 51 held were released this afternoon.

The West sector police state that they have lost 26 of their men in East Berlin sector police swoops.

The remaining 47 East sector police held in West Berlin Police Headquarters today maintained their hunger strike, which they had begun yesterday morning. "But every time we push some food through a little of it disappears," a West Berlin sergeant remarked.

The younger Soviet section of the Communist-dominated Free German Youth Organization in East Germany—spent the afternoon singing Communist songs.

"The elderly police did not say much and seemed afraid to talk to us," a West sector policeman said. "Their singing gets on our nerves—we wish they would eat and keep quiet," he added.

East Berlin Police Headquarters refused to give any information about the 26 West Berlin police hostages. "I do not know where they are. I have no information about their condition," a terse female Police Commandant's voice replied on the telephone this evening.

CHARGES LAID

The East and West police now held were held while passing through their rival sectors on their way home. The West Berlin police whose homes are in the Soviet sector have been warned not to go home tonight. The six "People's" police arrested on Tuesday will appear before an American Court tomorrow, charged with unauthorized possession of firearms and other violations of the four-power agreements.

Armed Soviet and British troops patrolled the zone boundary tonight under the glare of searchlights erected by the British authorities. Soviet troops hung a huge placard—the photograph of the East German Prime Minister, Dr. Otto Grotewohl—from their faces facing the British troops.—Reuter.

GRIM FIGHTING IN SEOUL DRIVE BY MARINES

Five South Korean Divisions Launch Big Push In South

Tokyo, Sept. 22.

The bitterest battle of the northern campaign roared on the dust-shrouded approaches to Seoul today as the Marines fought to clear the Reds out of the fire-eaten industrial suburb of Yongdungpo and secure its main east-west highway and railway.

The exact positions of the two Marine spearheads driving at the Red-held former South Korean capital from the southwest and northwest lost in a confusion of slow and overloaded communications from the front. At 4 p.m. yesterday, United Press correspondent Jack James reported that the southern spearhead, fighting for Yongdungpo just across the Han river from Seoul, was halted by the "worst fire" the Marines yet encountered. The northern prong, which is across the river, drove into Seoul's western suburbs.

To the south the Seventh Division rushed up to protect the flank of the Fifth Marine Regiment in Yongdungpo as another Marine regiment disembarked at Inchon 18 miles away.

The drive to capture Seoul jumped off yesterday morning as the city's Communist leaders fled north. The northern prong progressed comparatively rapidly, knocking the enemy off the hills commanding the north-south railroad three miles northwest of the city before noon.

The advance element of the southern prong swept across a rice paddy valley toward Yongdungpo. Then machine-guns slashed a bloody pattern in their ranks. Morning curfew-chimes among them. Rifle fire erupted as a Marine here and there.

HEAVY FIRE

"The Communist fire of all types was the heaviest and most accurate I have witnessed since action started," wrote James, who has covered the Korean war since the Communists rolled toward Seoul on June 25.

It took its toll of casualties, who rolled back to aid stations through a pea-soup fog of yellow dust in loaded lorries and ambulance jeeps over roads six inches deep in slithering dust.

But the Leathernecks still on the line inched forward as the Navy and Marine fighter bombers in a cloudless sky above the dust-lashed at enemy gun positions and American shells erupted around them.

BRITISH ADVANCE

Elements of the British brigade advancing swiftly from the Nakdong River bridgehead had lost at night pushed forward nearly five miles.

The British troops moved through hill country practically unopposed.

Communist mortar bombs dripped spasmodically among the advanced elements causing slight casualties but failed to delay the progress.

M.P. Attacked With Knife

London, Sept. 21.

An unemployed brick-layer was imprisoned for two years here today for attacking a Conservative Member of Parliament, Mr. Geoffrey Hutchinson, with a knife.

The brick-layer, Gordon Norris, aged 36, had income tax grievances. So he went to see Mr. Hutchinson. He pulled a knife from his sleeve and lunged at Mr. Hutchinson, who grappled with him until help came, receiving a slight cut on his shoulder.

Norris alleged that after hearing his troubles Mr. Hutchinson laughed at him.—Reuter

ECONOMIC AID BAN MODIFIED

Washington, Sept. 21.

The House of Representatives refused today to impose an outright ban on economic aid to nations exporting potential war materials to Russia or her satellites.

Instead, it approved a provision giving the National Security Council power to halt aid to any nation whose trade with Russia is found to be "contrary to the security interests of the United States."

The provision approved was backed by President Truman's supporters as a substitute for a Senate amendment voted by the Senate on American aid to countries which export to Russia "arms or munitions or military material or articles or commodities useful for military purposes."

The main difference between the Senate provision and the House plan is that the latter gives the National Council—of which the President is head—discretion in determining when economic aid should be halted.

The Senate provision did not allow this leeway. A conference between the two Houses will be necessary to reach an agreement.—Reuter.

London Gas Strike Not Waning

London, Sept. 21.

North London housewives took twice as long as usual to cook the evening meal and darkness descended on many streets tonight as the seven-day gas strike showed no signs of waning.

Nearly 1,500 men, seeking a new wage rise, had stopped work. Some 35,000 street lamps were again unlit.—Reuter.

38 Parallel Unlikely Cause A Halt

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT

London, Sept. 21.

Reports from America today suggest that America troops will drive the North Koreans over the 38th Parallel and then sweep on to the Manchurian border.

The Evening Standard's New York correspondent writes tonight "It is an open secret at Pentagon, according to one report today, that America intends to keep driving until the North Korean Army is wiped out and the Peninsula cleared of Communists right to the Manchurian border."

"Some form of United Nations approval will be sought for this as soon as the Allied offensive is rolling at full speed." The American Embassy commented: "This is not a question for America to decide alone. This is a United Nations venture under the United Nations flag and governed by a United Nations resolution. The Commander-in-Chief, who just happens to be an American, but whose American troops are more heavily committed in Korea than those of any other country is a United Nations Commander-in-Chief.

"If there is to be a change in policy it must be decided either by the Security Council or the General Assembly of the United Nations."

Vyshinsky To Go Slower

New York, Sept. 21.

Mr. Andrei Vyshinsky, Soviet delegate to the United Nations, was warned by a traffic policeman for speeding yesterday.

The policeman, Timothy O'Neill, told him that 55 miles an hour on a congested road was too fast.

"This is just a fair warning," the policeman said. "Next time we will give you a summons."

Mr. Vyshinsky smiled and through his interpreter promised not to go so fast in future.—Reuter.

Hongkong Put On Black List

Washington, Sept. 21.

The Commerce Department today banned any unlicensed export of strategic goods to Portuguese Macao and Hong Kong.

Officials said that the order was designed to stop leakages to Communist China.

Previously, small shipments were exempted from licensing.

The Department also added items to its list of goods requiring licences for export to any country except Canada. The list includes types of pneumatic tires and inner tubes, some iron and steel mill products, electrical machinery and apparatus, locomotives engines and parts, track-laying and wheel-type tractors.—Reuter.

Rome Air Crash

Rome, Sept. 21.

A single-seater private plane, which crashed today in the suburbs of Rome seriously injuring the pilot, brushed the roofs of several flats and ended up in the middle of a street.—Reuter.

EDITORIAL

Trading With Russia

PRESIDENT Truman's effort to squash in Congress the Senate approved proposal that economic aid be denied to any country selling potential war materials to Russia and her satellites provides the latest highlight in this highly controversial subject. Steady pressure has been exerted by the United States on all partners in the North Atlantic Treaty, but making representations is one thing and the issue of an ultimatum is quite another. Apart from other factors involved in the dispute, and it has grown into a dispute, Washington has so broadened the scope of what it regards as strategic that, strictly speaking, scarcely an item could escape that definition. Supply of the wool of Australia and the tin and rubber of Malaya is particularly unwelcome. Britain's disinclination to accept the American view in its entirety has less to do with disagreement in principle than it has with a very different analysis of the diplomatic consequences of a virtual economic blockade of countries behind the Iron Curtain. Hostility of the Russians to the free nations is ill-disguised, but an open act of reprisal by all countries backed by the United States, on the basis of a virtual order from Washington, must inevitably exacerbate international tension and bring it close to breaking point. President Truman has apparently given some ground to British opinion along these lines, for in his message to Congress he pointed out that bludgeoning America's allies would be fraught with danger for the United States and to world peace. There is full realization, too, that the Senate proposal, should it go through, which is not very probable, would be absurdly mischievous. The damage to the democratic world would be enormous and that to Russia trivial. It is noteworthy that in this week's debate in the House of Commons when the Conservative attack was directed towards blockade, Mr. Oliver Lyttelton found himself agreeing that trade between Britain and Eastern Europe of mutual benefit should continue provided there were safeguards against the export of war materials. The assurances given by the President of the Board of Trade seemed entirely satisfactory, and the issue finally was not pressed to a division. Nothing in the nature of machine tools will be sent to East Europe unless they are not needed by Britain and her allies for defence purposes, and orders already placed will be placed under embargo until the requirements have been reviewed. All this business is a significant change from the atmosphere three years ago. General Marshall offered full co-operation with any government willing to assist in the task of recovery and the Russians attended the Paris conference when the Marshall Plan was launched. When they were not permitted to revise the plan to fit their own desires, they departed in high dudgeon. The Moscow Government, in fact, refused to accept any form of Marshall aid, and pursued more flagrantly her own mysterious policies. From that angle, Russia or her satellites could have no real complaint if the Western world took decisive steps to prevent them getting machinery which might be used to increase their war potential. The dream of a peaceful world has for the moment disappeared—despite the Vyshinsky peroration in the General Assembly—and the blame does not lie with the West.

Keeping White Shoes "White"

By ELEANOR ROSS

A LITTLE, just a little good care, is a small price to pay for the good appearance and longer wear of your shoes. Good shoes of good leather, well fitted, and then well treated are the foundation of one's appearance.

From the Sole Leather Bureau of the Tanners' Council of America comes good advice on shoe care which we are glad to pass on to our readers. We'll start with white shoe care, as this is high season for those pretty white leather pumps and spectators. A mild coloring is quickly remedied by a single application of a reliable cleaner, and its prompt application will prevent the later need for drastic treatment or excessive scouring. Where water-type cleaners are used, it is especially important to put the white shoes on shoe trees before beginning the operation. The shoes will retain their shape and won't shrink. Follow package directions scrupulously in using any white cleaner.

Badly Soiled

If the shoes are badly soiled, use the rule of a mild soap, and clean the shoes with an application of suds, removing with a soft dry cloth. Keep shoes as dry as possible, for excessive wetting will make oils and make the leather hard with a predisposition to crack. Never, never use solvents such as ether, gasoline, naphtha or alcohol to clean white shoes. If water clean and soap fail to remove stains, then use sparingly—carbon tetrachloride. Apply with a clean cloth, then rub the spot with a dry, clean cloth in a circular rubbing motion. Do not dry white leather shoes in direct sunlight.

When shoes, whether white, black or colored, are not in use, keep them on proper shoe trees.

Separates more popular than ever

Separates are in the blouse sphere to stay, with a bigger autumn plan for the blouse with skirt to match. Blouse manufacturers in America who added skirts this past season say they will continue in a similar vein for autumn. And the ranks of those not carrying skirts diminish as more manufacturers take on the extra unit in an effort to cultivate extra volume.

Matching skirts are expected to be the "making" of back-to-school volume. At popular and moderate price houses, they are natural in corduroy, wool jersey and heavy silk—all high in favour in autumn fabric samplings. Separates in double lay red sheer or sheer over opaque will star in dressy ensembles.

The interconnection of this trend is a result of the growing acceptance of skirts at blouse departments.

Inspired By Queen Mary

Seen here is one of the models in the autumn collection of Digby Morton, London's top designer. "Ditchley" illustrates a new line that intrigued buyers and the Press in London and Paris. It is inspired by the Silhouette made famous by Queen Mary. Built high to a soft turn-over collar and tapering to the knee, it has buttons where they have not been for two decades. This model has been purchased by many buyers from the U.S. The hat "Royal Affair" is by Redell.

Transformation—

(and the model does it on £10 a year)

AUDREY WHITE, 22, red-haired, hazel-eyed, is a professional model. Her face is her fortune, and she has learned to make the most of it with the right make-up.

Picture (left) shows her without make-up, her face freshly washed with soap and water. It is still a pretty face with good features, but it is pale with no light and shades. Second picture (right) is taken with a moderate amount of make-up. An already pretty face becomes at once more interesting, more vivacious, more striking.

The six basic make-up rules can do this for every woman—beautiful, ordinary or just plain ugly.

It cost Audrey about £10 15s. a year for her cosmetics—just 16s. more than the Stafford Cripps income-tax allowance of £10 to professional models for their annual make-up. She changes her make-up twice a day, takes it off at night with soap and water, uses a good nourishing cream in her bath in the mornings before making up.

Water-Repellent Shoes Found Not Strictly Injurious To Foot Health

By H. N. BUNDESEN, M.D.

ALMOST any irritation of the foot is likely to be thought of as athlete's foot or ringworm, whereas some of the most severe of such irritations are due to substances in the footwear itself. It is the aim of most shoe manufacturers, for instance, to construct water-repellent shoes. Though a good thing in itself, this often makes trouble for people with sensitive skins, since it prevents the evaporation of sweat. This is not only irritating in itself, but serves to draw other irritants from other parts of the shoe into the insole where they can come in contact with the feet. Thin socks, which damp, do not keep these irritating substances from reaching the skin.

Skin of Feet

Once the skin of the feet has developed a dermatitis or inflammation from such causes, infections of various kinds, including ringworm, are more likely to occur.

Three factors which seem to contribute to dermatitis from footwear are: First, the linings of the shoes may be made up of various coloured and coated types of leather and canvas. Adhesive material is used to fasten these linings to the upper part of the shoes. These pads are usually made up of rubber and paper, and the insole materials are cemented to the bottom of the shoe. All of these things make the shoe moisture-repellent and keep moisture from evaporating. Secondly, water-proof materials in contact with the feet cause the skin to become sticky, particularly in hot weather. Sweating is continuous on the soles of the feet, which means more moisture.

Pressure on Skin

The third factor of importance is pressure on the skin made by straps and laces, which means that irritating materials may more easily enter the skin. In these instances of dermatitis of the feet, a cure can often be brought about merely by having the patient go barefoot. In such cases an effect should be made to find the substances to which the patient is sensitive, so that contact with them can be eliminated.

History Of London Seen In Miniature

New quarters in Kensington Palace, London, (where Queen Victoria was born and Queen Mary lived for a time) are being allotted to the famous museum of historical clothes and children's toys which used to be on show in the London Museum at Lancaster House. Situated next door to Clarence House, Princess Elizabeth's London home, Lancaster House will in future be used only for Government receptions and entertainment. Among the most important exhibits will be models of old London and it has been decided that the rooms in Kensington Palace shall illustrate in chronological order the history and the social life of the metropolis through the centuries.

For Children

One room will be set aside for children, and here will be on view dolls' houses and toys. In another room will be the notable collection of costumes which have been preserved from the 17th century onwards. The removal vans will also eventually call for the famous collection of jewels owned by the London Museum—the Cheapside Hoard—which is now stored in the strong-room of Lancaster House. Overseas visitors to the Festival of Britain will no doubt be particularly interested in the Royal Coronation robes, including those of Queen Victoria. There are also many theatrical costumes—including the ballet dresses of the renowned Russian dancer, Pavlova, and the costume worn by Grimaldi, most famous of clowns.

The bright side

THE VISITOR who wants to do something different for little money will enjoy lunching in a cool Parisian cafe on a hot day or dining in the middle of the Bois de Boulogne at a little "bistro" with fresh cream straight from the cows, eaten with wild strawberries.

DEPICTED is a versatile little dress prepared to go from daytime into evening when treated to a pretty tulle apron. The frock is of black crepe in a pencil-slim silhouette, and has short, up-dipping sleeves and a scooped-out neckline. The apron, attached to a velvet sash, is of black tulle with lace panels in front.

For daytime or evening.

Strapless sheath frock.

DEFINITELY on the dressy side is this frock designed for important late-afternoon-evening occasions through the summer. Strapless, it is straight and slim as a reed except for the embroidered jabot peplum at one side. There is one-sided treatment of the net at the bodice also. Not shown is a tiny cover-up, bolero, of matching navy blue tissue crepe. This is a dress that is definitely attractive.

Let's Eat

Preparing Community Meals

IT is interesting to me as a Chef to learn that the Home Demonstration Agents of Massachusetts are teaching the preparation of community meals. This is a very worthwhile project, for most homemakers are not experienced in large quantity cooking, so when they are required to plan or prepare a church, grange or club meal they are what you say, "flabbergasted."

"One of the points emphasized in these Massachusetts classes, Chef, is the use of less expensive, plentiful foods. They introduce more interesting breads, more salads, better prepared vegetables, and desserts other than pie. And they plan better balanced meals, with colourful, attractively served plates."

"And has this training proved popular, Madame?"

Quantity Meals

"Extremely popular, Chef. The trainees learned not only how to plan large quantity meals, and do large quantity cooking, but the classes proved to be a good way of teaching nutrition, for many of the suggestions for cooking and serving were carried into the homes."

"In two counties carrying the project, 620 differing women attended. These women assisted in serving 210 meals, with 19,533 persons attending."

Measure 10" from B for C. Directly across on fold mark D. Measure from D to left of D 4" (E). Measure 20" to left of F for G. Connect C, E and G, making curved underarm, as shown. Cut on this line for front. Fold over on back along shoulder line (A), and cut back underarm same as the front.

Turn Narrow Hem

On sleeve and neck edge turn a narrow hem to wrong side and stitch, baste lace in place under hem and stitch. Begin at underarm seam for sleeves and on either shoulder for neck. Shape lace around curve, join in narrow seam, then overcast ends to prevent fraying.

To make centre-stitched ties, make 1/2" turn on both ends, fold raw side edge over a scant 1/3 width of strip width, and fold selvage over a scant 1/3. Stitch through centre for crepe, batiste or any soft, full length of strip. Cut the strip in half.

Mark the Waistline

Mark waistline with pin 4" each side of centre front. Stitch the ends on, as at H. Fold a 1/2" tuck toward centre seam, stitch, as at I, making tuck 1 1/2" long.

Begin at bottom of sleeves, French-seam underarms and sides, finishing about 12" above hem. Make narrow hems on these open edges. Stitch these across seam at upper end, as at J, to prevent tearing. Turn and then on fold 2" to left of A and edges.

Every year the United Kingdom Government spends millions of pounds for printing and bookbinding work which is carried out by

HIS MAJESTY'S STATIONERY OFFICE

His Majesty's Stationery Office was founded in 1786 as an administrative reform to stop the waste of public money that occurred when each State department bought its own paper, ink, sealing wax, and the like, as it pleased.

Since that date the functions of the department have been considerably augmented, and it is now the United Kingdom Government's central organisation for the supply of printing, binding, office supplies, office machinery of all kinds, published books and periodicals for the public service.

It also undertakes duplicating and distributing services for Government departments, and advises them on the production and storage of films.

In addition the Stationery Office is the publisher for the Government, selling the official publications through its own shops and through leading booksellers acting as agents. The Controller, at present Mr. H.G. Welch, C.B.E., is by Royal Letters Patent, King's Printer of Acts of Parliament and is responsible for the administration of all Crown Copyright, which, incidentally, now includes official photographs and films as well as the written or printed word.

The great increase in social legislation in the early years of this century, and during World War I, was responsible for the major changes which gave the Stationery Office its modern extended functions.

By W.J. ARCHER

While the work referred to above represents some of the more spectacular productions of the Stationery Office's own presses, they only account for about a quarter of the Government's printing and binding requirements. The remaining share of the work is undertaken on paper supplied by the Stationery Office by private printers in all parts of Britain who hold long-term contracts for "Groups" of work.

A "Group" may include one or more specified works or it may be for such requirements as may arise for a particular style of printing for one or more government departments.

The form of tender is priced by the Stationery Office and also includes details of the work involved together with an estimate of requirements. Contractors are invited to tender at the schedule prices or at a premium or a discount. These contracts are usually for a period of seven years.

Other Work

Work not covered by group contracts is put out to tender on an ad hoc basis. Comprehensive specifications containing particulars of process, size, printing number, date for delivery, and paper which the Stationery Office will supply are sent to contractors and bids received thereon. These two forms of contract cover all printing, bookbinding and block-making processes. The contracts are all awarded as the result of competitive tendering.

A Division of the Stationery Office, composed mainly of technically qualified officers is responsible for the co-ordination of the allocation of printing and binding between the Stationery Office Printing Works and Contractors; questions relating to the preparation, award and review of contracts are dealt with in a Contracts Division while contractors' accounts are examined by technically qualified staff in the Accounts Division before payment.

A Layout Section is also employed; it has done much to improve and co-ordinate the style of Government printing. It should also be noted that the fact that the printing of electoral registers throughout Britain (by between 700 and 800 contractors) is a responsibility of the King's Printer.

While this article puts emphasis on the printing and bookbinding activities of the Stationery Office, an idea of the proportion they bear to the whole may be formed from the following particulars of the 1950-51 Estimate for the Department:

Gross total vote	£13,658,125
Printing and binding (exclusive of paper) by own presses	£1,141,000
By contractors	£2,672,000
	£4,813,000

London Gazette

The London Gazette, the oldest newspaper in Britain, first published in 1665 and then called the Oxford Gazette as the Court was at Oxford to escape the Great Plague of London, has long since been edited, printed and published by the Stationery Office, but limited to official intelligence.

Sectional telephone directories for the whole of Britain

Pension Warrants are produced on special-purpose machines which print both sides (one side in two colours), number, date consecutively, perforate and deliver in lifts of 52s (one for each week of the year) for subsequent stitching, covering and trimming.

The Stationery Office has a library at the British Museum where new work is bound and thousands of priceless volumes have been repaired and rebound.

Food Tickets

Faced with the need for producing at short notice millions of tickets for food rationing it acquired in 1918 possession of a large printing works. The experiment was so successful that it was continued into peace time, and the Stationery Office now operates 12 factories equipped with modern machinery, much of it specially designed for the production of particular work, 2,500 work-people being employed.

The operative staff, a large part of which is now established with pension and other rights, is engaged under trade union conditions, the managers and most of the supervisory staff being established Civil Servants with special technical experience and qualifications.

The expenses incurred by the printing works are paid by the Stationery Office from moneys voted by Parliament. For purposes of trading accounts, which are prepared annually for each of the Presses, credit is given for work done, but actual money payment is not made. Any profit shown in the trading accounts is therefore only a "book" profit at

The most interesting experiment of all was the revival by the Glydebourne Opera of Richard Strauss's "Ariadne auf Naxos" in its original form, not seen in Britain since 1913.

It was in 1911 when Hugo von Hofmannsthal, the Austrian writer, searching for material for a new libretto, hit on the idea of a one-act work, telling the story of Ariadne after Theseus had abandoned her on the island of Naxos, where Bacchus discovered her, wooing and heartbroken, and persuaded her to be his wife, thus conferring "immortality" upon her.

Hofmannsthal, however, wished to dress his classic person-him lovable as well as glibble. "Ariadne" followed in German, with outstanding performances by the Hollweg as the comic Zerbinette and Hilde Zadek as the tragic heroine.

Oliver Messel's scenery and costumes and the playing of the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra under Sir Thomas Beecham added considerably to the evening's delights.

It was a good idea to ask visiting orchestras to give programmes of the music of their own countries. Thus the Orchestre National de la Radio-diffusion Française gave music by Bizet, Fauré and Ravel at the opening concert of the Festival, and followed this two nights later with the lighter music of Debussy, Grieg, Lalo, Poulenc and Delibes.

The Staatskapelle Orchestra of Darmstadt, played Carl Nielsen's 5th symphony, and also gave fine performances of music by Beethoven and Brahms, and the orchestra and chorus of La Scala, Milan, gave Verdi's Requiem, on one evening and a programme of Italian Operatic Music on another.

Though no programme was devoted entirely to English works, the Halle Orchestra of Manchester played Vaughan Williams' 5th symphony, while the Glasgow Orpheus Choir gave an evening of Scottish and Choral songs. Among new works was the Cello Concerto of the American critic, Virgil Thompson.

The drama this year was mainly Scottish. At the Lyceum, the Glasgow Citizens Theatre, formed in 1943, containing some of Scotland's best actors, presented two new plays and revived an old one—all by Scots authors.

Both Comedies

Both new pieces are comedies, sometimes becoming farcical; both, in their deeper moments comment on the troubles of our age.

Eric Linklater's "The Atom Doctor" (very reminiscent of Ben Jonson's "The Alchemist") tells of a loquacious and disarming quack who gives his patients "atom pills" and bamboozles them with his talk of neutrons and electrons.

James Bridie's "The Queen's Comedy" links present-day mortals with personages of the Trojan Wars. He has taken a classic theme for his new comedy and clothed it in modern language. The theme is war

Doctors get a 'plague' warning

By CHAPMAN PINCHER

WHILE 30 people are ill at Broomfield, Herts, after eating ham, Britain's medical officers of health are being warned of the danger of "plague-size" epidemics of food-poisoning.

The doctors are told that unless the rising number of cases is checked, outbreaks must be expected as serious and difficult to control as plague was 400 years ago.

A medical inquiry has proved that something far more serious than odd instances of "dirty" food lies behind recent outbreaks.

Toughened

Doctors have convincing evidence that the germs which cause food-poisoning have recently increased their virulence.

They can now multiply within the human body and so be passed from person to person.

A few years ago these germs could not live in the human body. Food tainted with them could poison people who ate it, but the germs themselves were killed inside the body. So epidemics of food-poisoning were not possible.

During the last eight years the germs have become tougher. Hundreds of people have unwittingly become carriers of the disease.

Doctors now say that these people are as dangerous to the rest of us as carriers of typhoid.

The menace from carriers is increasing as more and more people get into the habit of eating in canteens and restaurants, where one carrier handing food can rapidly spread infection.

Five Steps

The man most responsible for the realization that food-poisoning is a serious threat is Dr James Grant, Medical Officer of Health for Gateshead, who carried out the main inquiry.

He lists five steps which must be taken immediately if food-poisoning is to be controlled in time:

REMOVAL of all carriers from entering establishments until they can be treated and cured.

ACTION by the Health Ministry to compel doctors to report all cases of food-poisoning so that carriers can be tracked down.

GREATER insistence on personal cleanliness among all people handling food.

STERILISATION of dried egg and all other foods likely to be contaminated with food-poisoning germs.

IMPROVED storage of food in shops, warehouses, and restaurants to keep it free from flies and vermin.

Reflections on the Edinburgh Festival

By R. G. Weetlock

THERE have been certain changes of policy for the Fourth International Festival of Music and Drama which has just ended its three weeks' run at Edinburgh. More new and little known works have been fully maintained, there is internationalism has been fully maintained, three have been more opportunities to see and hear Scottish works.

The most interesting experiment of all was the revival by the Glydebourne Opera of Richard Strauss's "Ariadne auf Naxos" in its original form, not seen in Britain since 1913.

It was in 1911 when Hugo von Hofmannsthal, the Austrian writer, searching for material for a new libretto, hit on the idea of a one-act work, telling the story of Ariadne after Theseus had abandoned her on the island of Naxos, where Bacchus discovered her, wooing and heartbroken, and persuaded her to be his wife, thus conferring "immortality" upon her.

Eric Linklater's "The Atom Doctor" (very reminiscent of Ben Jonson's "The Alchemist") tells of a loquacious and disarming quack who gives his patients "atom pills" and bamboozles them with his talk of neutrons and electrons.

James Bridie's "The Queen's Comedy" links present-day mortals with personages of the Trojan Wars. He has taken a classic theme for his new comedy and clothed it in modern language. The theme is war and destiny as personified in the Gods the story that of Juno's race to thwart Jupiter in his desire to help the Trojans.

On the upper stage the Gods play out their comedy; on the lower stage the mortals—Greeks fighting in the Trojan war—wear khaki battle dress and talk in the idiom of World War II. The Gods, according to Mr Bridie, are shallow and selfish; and the play, though occasionally witty, never explores the full depths of its theme.

His Juno was well-played by Sonia Dresdel from London, while Scotland's leading character actor, Duncan Macrae, played "Vulcan". He was also Mr Linklater's voluble Atom Doctor, his leading lady in that piece being Patricia Burke. Both plays were produced by Tyrone Guthrie.

The third play, "Douglas" by the Reverend John Home, was first performed at Edinburgh in 1750, and caused its author to be summoned before the Presbytery of Haddington to answer for his offence in writing a play about a man who subsequently put it on at Covent Garden, London, and the famous Sarah

MALAYAN LEADER URGES FORMATION OF NATIONAL ARMY

London, Sept. 21. Dato Onn Bin Jaafar, an influential Malay political leader, who is here for the talks on aid to South-East Asia, today urged the formation of a Malayan national army.

In an interview with Reuters, he said that Britain was wasting much money on her Army in Malaya. A first-class Malayan army should be recruited in its stead.

"I could guarantee 50,000 men immediately," he added. "It would be easy. Unfortunately, there is a disinclination on the part of the British Government to trust the local people. That is really what it boils down to."

With the 55-year-old President of the United Malay National Organisation was the young Malayan Chinese leader of the Singapore Progressive Party, Mr. C. C. Tan.

Mr. Tan said that again and again in Singapore they had advised the Government to consider the recruitment of a Malayan corps composed of the finest elements of the people, who could help to relieve the British troops now costing so much money to the British taxpayer.

So far, however, all their suggestions had fallen on barren ground.

There was a new generation of people in Malaya now. Some had been there for three or four generations. They saw Malaya as their mother country and were very patriotic. It was time they were encouraged to defend their country by taking up arms.

MODEST START

The new army could begin modestly, perhaps with just a brigade. It might not be the complete answer to the guerrilla operating in country, but it would help considerably. It would also promote a greater sense of nationalism.

Dato Onn Bin Jaafar, referring again to the British Government's "bad mistake" of not trusting the local people, said that even in the Malaya Regiment there was opportunity for Malays to become officers with the King's Commission and local officers with the High Commissioners' Commission but there was no parity or equality between the two.

Malaysians who had served with the Malaya Regiment since before the war found themselves superseded by Europeans. This caused great dissatisfaction.

The same principles applied to the police, where local officers with long service were subordinated to men from overseas.

Dato Onn complained that there had been a great influx of British officers and Gurkhas. It had gone a little beyond what the emergency required. There was no necessity, for instance, for creating Gurkha settlements and even a campment.

"In fairness to the Gurkhas," Mr. Tan said, "they are an excellent body of men."

The Malayan political leader said he would go on advocating the senior posts in the Malayan Administrative Service should be thrown open to the local people.—Reuters.

EDINBURGH FESTIVAL

Siddons appeared in it when she visited Edinburgh in 1784.

Dr Johnson said there were "not less good lines" in the whole play and I think modern audiences must agree with him. Despite a clever company, with Dame Sybil Thorne, Lady Handolph, and the stage alive with 18th century tartan, the drama of the lost son, his brief return and early death, is likely to return to the shelf after its brief 20th century airing.

Another minor classic, revived for the Festival, and which will later be seen in London was Ben Jonson's "Bartholomew Fair", which the Old Vic put on at the Assembly Hall. First produced in 1614, the play's chief character, as its name implies, is really the greatest of English fairs, which London's Lord Mayor proclaimed open yearly on August 24 (St. Bartholomew's Day) from the mid-fifteenth century to 1855, when it was abolished.

Like "The Three Estates" which preceded it at the Assembly Hall, this play is a mordant satire on religious hypocrisy. Its characters are symbols rather than persons and it needs considerable gusto to bring them alive today.

In this Old Vic was particularly successful, Roger Livesey as Justice Overdo, Mark Dignam as Zeal-of-the-Land-Busy, Dorothy Tutin as a gay little wife, and, above all, Robert Edeson as the pompous, self-important, and somewhat of a gentleman who is anybody's prey, are all worthy of mention.

Of the ballets presented at the Empire, I liked best "Fall River Legend" and "Fancy Free", given by the American Ballet Theatre, and "A Tragedy in Verona" which had its first European performance in Edinburgh by the Grand Ballet du Marquis de Cuevas. Of these the first is a dramatic, realistic story of 19th century America, the second a gay trifle about three sailors on leave in New York, and the third a slight but evocative version of "Romeo and Juliet" to music of Tchaikovsky.

Rescuer Overcome By Gas

Miners were recently trapped underground at Knocklinnock Castle Colliery, New Cumnock, Ayrshire, Scotland, when a whole field sank into the colliery workings, during the night, due to flooding from the torrential rains. Rescuers reached the entombed men through an old pit working by cutting through 30 feet of coal. One of the rescuers overcome by gas, is shown being carried away on a stretcher. U.N. Refuses To Throw Out Charge Of Aggression

Flushing Meadow, Sept. 22.

Russia today failed in an attempt to persuade the United Nations to throw out Nationalist China's charges of Russian aggression against its territory.

The Assembly's 14-nation Steering Committee, which arranges the agenda for the session, voted to include the Nationalist complaints. Only Czechoslovakia supported Russia.

Chinese Communist Celebrations

Tokyo, Sept. 22.

Peking Radio said today that preparations are underway in Hongkong and Macao for celebrating the first anniversary of the Chinese Communist government on October 1.

It said the Hongkong-Kowloon Trade Union Federation had entrusted the job of making preparations to three member unions, including the H.K. Telephone Company Union and the Dairy Farm Union. A rally is also being planned by the Hongkong Chinese Chamber of Commerce, the Chinese Manufacturers' Association and representatives of Chinese industrial and commercial circles in Hongkong.—United Press.

Grim Fighting In Seoul

Sihan-mi after a four-mile advance against scattered resistance, but pulled back, clinging to the commanding ground to the east for the night.

Sihan-mi formerly was the Headquarters of three Communist divisions—Second, Fourth and Ninth.

Fighting west of Yongnam was the first real enemy resistance the Second Division had encountered since it pushed across the Nakdong. The Division lost three tanks yesterday, one to anti-tank rifle and two to mines.—United Press and Reuters.

The Russian delegate, Mr. Andrei Vyshinsky, also failed to have the Assembly ignore the dispute between Greece and her Northern neighbours as well as the question of human rights violations in the Balkan countries.

The Committee voted to debate 14 items during the session. The question of United Nations relations with Spain was also included on the agenda. Russia and Czechoslovakia opposed this. There were two abstentions.

Mr. Vyshinsky spoke against the inclusion of all four items but his protest was relatively mild.

He accused the "Kuomintang clique" and its supporters of seeking an illegal Assembly hearing.

The only legal Chinese Government was at Peking and Russia was the "best of terms" with it, he said.

He asserted that the only aggression against China had been committed by the United States through its policy in Formosa. He pleaded for rejection of the Nationalist charge as "unwise and inappropriate".

All four items, he declared, were "in direct opposition to the international co-operation which we are here to promote".

Mr. Vyshinsky called for the withdrawal of foreign troops and missions from Greece and the holding of elections there. The troubles in Greece would then be solved, he said.

Another Soviet delegate, Mr. Jacob Malik, later vigorously objected to the inclusion of a complaint of Soviet failure to

British Rearmament Will Not Materially Affect Commonwealth

London, Sept. 21.

Britain was today understood to have assured the Ministers of the nine Commonwealth countries meeting here that its rearmament programme would not materially affect its exports to Commonwealth countries.

But in view of the fact that economic and other related factors were liable to quick change, the assurance could only be considered to hold good for the near future.

PLANNING EUROPEAN ARMY

Washington, Sept. 21.

Mr. George C. Marshall, American Secretary of Defence, announced today that he would go to New York tomorrow to confer with the British and French Defence Ministers.

Mr. Marshall, who was sworn in today as successor to Mr. Louis Johnson, declined to say if he would take with him a plan for the rearmament of Germany.

Mr. Marshall turned aside questions of the war in Korea, saying that since he resigned as Secretary of State he had tried conscientiously to keep aloof from contact with the armed forces and the State Department.

The meeting of Defence Ministers—Mr. Emmanuel Shinwell (Britain), Mr. Jules Moch (France) and Mr. Marshall—has been called to discuss the planning of an integrated defence force for Western Europe.—Reuters.

TECHNICAL PROBLEMS

New York, Sept. 21.

The Defence Ministers of Britain, France and the United States will try at their hurriedly arranged meeting here tomorrow to resolve some of the technical problems of launching the proposed combined Atlantic Army in Europe.

There is no fixed agenda for the meeting which was convened a few days ago at the suggestion of the British Foreign Minister, Mr. Ernest Bevin.

The Defence Ministers, Mr. Emmanuel Shinwell (Britain), Mr. Jules Moch (France) and the newly appointed General George C. Marshall (United States), are however expected to discuss (1) whether and how German contingents can be incorporated in an integrated North Atlantic defence force; (2) the method of organisation of the command of such a force; (3) the powers to be given in peacetime to the Supreme Commander of the force, who will, it is anticipated, be an American.

FRENCH ATTITUDE

The final decision on the first point is one for the Foreign Ministers to make but it is assumed here that both General Marshall and Mr. Shinwell will seek to persuade Mr. Moch that his Government should agree in principle to the incorporation of German contingents in the combined army or, at any rate, that the Western Defence Ministers should go ahead with the planning and organisation of Western European defence with this possibility in mind.—Reuters.

Death Of An Old Resident

The death occurred this morning at the Precious Blood Hospital of Mr. Eduardo Lorenzo Barros, long resident of Hongkong and a keen sportsman.

The late Mr. Barros was 65 years of age and had been ill for the last two or three months.

For many years he served with the Great Northern Telegraph and retired from the company on pension. He was member of numerous clubs, including the Club Lusitano, Club de Regatta, the Craggengower and the Catholic Union, and was for many years a prominent lawn bowls player. He was champion billiard and snooker player in the Catholic Union Club.

He leaves a daughter, Mrs. L. Ribeiro, and a son-in-law, with whom deep sympathy will be felt.

The funeral takes place this evening, the cortege passing the Monument at 5.30 p.m.

Informal Talks On Jap Peace Pact

Flushing, Sept. 21.

The United States began this week informal consultations with representatives of members of the Far Eastern Allied Commission concerning the prompt signing of a peace treaty with Japan.

Far Eastern experts, led by foreign policy adviser, Mr. John Foster Dulles, are taking advantage of the presence here for the General Assembly of the foreign ministers and top delegates from the countries concerned to put forth American views on the terms of the peace treaty.

An American spokesman, predicted it may take about one month before the results are known. He declined to comment on whether the Soviet Union, which is a member of the commission, would be approached, but other sources denied it.

Delegates said it was too early to comment on the United States proposals—all agree in principle that the state of war should be ended—but informed sources predicted that several countries, particularly Australia and New Zealand, had objections to the idea of rearming Japan.

Another important question is whether the peace treaty should be discussed within the Far Eastern Commission or by the Big Four—assuming that Vyshinsky would be interested in participating.

The United States would rather see the question decided by the Commission that would not have veto powers—contrary to what the Russians have been trying to obtain for several years.

On the assumption the issue were to be taken up by the Commission the question would arise whether Britain and India, who recognise the Chinese Communist, would be willing to sit together with the Chinese Nationalist delegate. Nobody disputes China's vital interest in the matter but which China should be invited to participate?

A British spokesman said that such questions would have to be solved in London on the cabinet level, but the issue of Chinese representation will poke its head in all and any debates on Japanese questions.—United Press.

Pete's 'Bad Feeling' Inspires Clever Play

By OSWALD JACOBY

"HOW did you ever dream up that play?" West asked resentfully.

"That's a standard play," said Jacoby. "You use it when you have a bad feeling about the trumps."

"You certainly had a bad feeling," signed West. "Your play won this time, but I'm still not convinced."

West should not have been so doubtful, since Pete's play assured the contract against anything but a 5-0 trump break. As Pete observed, it was a standard play.

West opened a queen of hearts, and Pete, playing the South hand, won with the ace. Pete saw that he was bound to lose a heart and a club. The contract therefore depended on losing no more than one spade trick.

The "normal" play is to lead a spade to dummy's ace and return a low spade with the intention of finessing the jack. This play loses two trump tricks. If West happens to have four spades headed by the queen-ten.

The correct play, as Pete demonstrated, is to win the first

♠ A98	♠ 752	♠ 1005	♠ Q84
♥ A98	♥ 752	♥ 1005	♥ Q84
♦ A98	♦ 752	♦ 1005	♦ Q84
♣ A98	♣ 752	♣ 1005	♣ Q84

trump trick in the South hand with the king. Pete then led a low trump towards dummy's ace-nine.

When West played his low spade, dummy's ace was finessed. This was, of course, and the rest was easy. Dummy's ace of spades was cashed, and West could take his queen of trumps whenever he liked.

It would have done West no good to play the ten of spades on the second round of trumps. Dummy would win with the ace and return the nine of spades to force out West's queen. South would later gain the lead and draw West's remaining trump with the jack.

It is important to note that South is still in good shape even if it turns out that East (rather than West) has four trumps to the queen-ten. After winning the first trump with the king, South leads a second trump towards dummy. West must discard, revealing the trump situation. Dummy wins with the ace of trumps and returns a trump towards South's jack. This limits East to one trump trick.

If the trumps break 3-2, South is never in any trouble. For example, if the finesse of dummy's nine happens to lose, only one trump will be left out. Declarer will speedily regain the lead and can draw the last trump with dummy's ace.

YOUR BIRTHDAY... By STELLA

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 22

If you were born today, your exceptionally vivid imagination can get you into all kinds of difficulties unless you are able to steer it into practical channels. Don't let your ideas go unexplored or you may find that someone else is getting rich on ideas you had first, but never did anything about. It might be well for you to team up with someone who can instrument your schemes.

Reckless by nature, you cannot endure monotony. Make sure that you don't get caught in some kind of routine work. You enjoy travel and will probably visit many far places during your lifetime. You have the type of mind which can be working on one project while planning the next one. Just don't get too many irons in the fire all at once.

You have a great deal of personal magnetism and you attract friends of both sexes. Impulsive and hot-tempered, you are sometimes too easily forgiven. Guard against speaking in anger.

For the greatest happiness, wed someone in Taurus, Gemini or Sagittarius.

To find what the stars have in store for tomorrow, select your birthday star and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

BY THE WAY

by Beachcomber

I HOPE the organisers of the 1951 Festival have their dreamy eyes on the industrial exhibition in Philadelphia, where a laundry will wash your shirt free of charge, while you wait.

What I want to see on the South Bank is queues of Americans holding their shirts while the Laundry Band plays "A Monetary Garden."

Another attraction, used with great effect at the exhibition of Aarhus in 1937, is little revolving saucers on eight-foot poles. Visitors jump up and snatch at them, using only the mouth. The more fun the better, as the old peer said when he cracked a lobster claw between two Gaiety girls' heads—and at Scott's, mark you.

The perils of publicity

THE new Hollywood idea of getting actresses married in such a way as to advertise films in which they play a bride has led the illogical Hollywood to suggest that a girl who is shot in his next film should be shot before it is made. When a henchman pointed out that if she was shot she couldn't make the film, Hollywood said: "Say, I didn't mean shot to death. I just meant to have her get herself a flesh-wound. In the leg, maybe."

Disappointment all round

KOOLUKATATTI, the MBo of M'Boonpa, has arrived in London yesterday for trade talks. He got stuck in the airport where he is staying. Two of his suitcases, in attempting to release him, got stuck themselves, and the door was wedged tightly. Carpenters were summoned, and the distinguished guests were shoe-horned out. In stepping clear of the door, the MBo tripped over a dog and measured his length on the floor. The dog bit the MBo's secretary, who had run forward to pick up his Chief. The MBo shouted at the Government official who had come to greet him on behalf of us all, "Now you don't get our tinned beefsteak—and you can keep your bicycle!"

Without comment

A CHILDREN'S home containing 15 children, of an average age of three, was recently visited by Inspectors from three different Ministries on the same day. Apparently word had reached the authorities that these infants were being taught to say please and thank you, and to do as they were told. To put a stop to this intolerable state of affairs the Inspectors (all women) told the matron that the children should not be taught this old-fashioned nonsense any more, and that they should take their meals at a buffet when they felt like it, and not at stated times.

Enough to make a cat laugh

YESTERDAY I read of a woman who asked for a divorce because her husband, on coming home at night, kissed the dog before he kissed her. Today I read of a divorce granted because a wife left her husband when, on coming home each night, he refused her request that he should kiss the cat. Several of the same kind of divorce have been granted. And that is the story of an old-fashioned reactionary like me who is who given the custody of the cat. And a married man entitled to leave all his money to a tortoise or a monkey?
